The Justice Studies major offers courses in criminal justice, law enforcement, community policing, criminal investigation, juvenile delinquency, criminal law and procedure, constitutional law, criminology, victimology, cybercrime, white collar crime, probation and parole, and many others. The Justice Studies degree prepares students for careers in law enforcement, the legal system, and corrections at a critical time in society. Field training placement internships are available.

Graduates of this program currently hold or have held positions such as prison wardens, correctional officers, attorneys, and officers of local, state and federal law enforcement agencies.

The program is available in person at both the Lewiston campus and the Coeur d'Alene Center, as well as online. LC State's online delivery is perfect for working adults and parents.

"The Justice Studies major allows students to take a fascinating intellectual journey studying the dynamic intersection between crime, law, and justice. It further prepares students for rewarding careers in law enforcement, the legal system, and corrections at a critical time when serving the community, while doing justice and respecting individual rights have become center stage." - Gene Straughan, Justice Studies professor

The professors I had the privilege of being taught by were extremely knowledgeable and seemed to truly care about me and my future. My entire undergraduate experience at LCSC had such a lasting impact on who I am today that I can't imagine having obtained my bachelor's degree anywhere else."
