Moving to a Port of Lewiston property has given Broemeling Steel & Machine Inc. more visibility to the public, better access for large trucks and equipment, a more industrial setting, and room to grow in the future.

“From the beginning everyone at the Port has been excellent to work with,” said Broemeling Steel & Machine President Micah Cope, who co-owns the business with Vice President Paul Robinett. “They’ve always been up front and prompt with any questions we have. It has been a pleasure to work with them.”

Micah and Paul acquired the business in 2006 after having worked for the previous owners and relocated to their new port location early last year. Their scope of work includes fabrication and installation of structural steel, handrails and catwalks, motor bases, and specialized equipment such as conveyors, augers, hoppers and tanks. They also perform a wide variety of machining jobs ranging from repair and tooling to prototyping and light manufacturing, as well as small, walk-in jobs like trailer repair, custom hitches, flatbeds and tool boxes.

“The advantages to working in the LC Valley are knowing who you’re working with, and building long-term relationships with our customers,” Micah said. “A business like ours benefits the community by providing a wide range of services that you would otherwise have to seek from out of town with people you don’t know. ... There is not much in the way of fabrication and machining that we can not handle.”
