

EDUCATION BY US

Meet, Dr. Fred Chilson, Dean for the School of Professional Studies at Lewis-Clark State College

Fred has been at the college for nearly 16 months, and in his position he oversees the Business, Teacher Education, and Nursing & Health Sciences divisions, as well as the library. Fred brings a unique and colorful personality to LC State. Beyond his colorful sport coats, extensive academic credentials, charming personality, and the leadership he provides, Chilson sets himself apart thanks to his penchant for out-of-the-ordinary research topics, such as tailgating and the death of shopping malls.

Among his strengths that make him such a good fit at LC State is his experience with accreditation and making sure the divisions he oversees meet or exceed national standards of quality.

“Accreditation and outcomes are critically important because it ensures that we are providing the education to the student the way that we say we are, and that we can prove it,” Chilson says. “... it truly comes down to the quality of education that we provide. We are not willing to sacrifice the quality. And I would put our programs up against anybody. Any of our programs.”

Meet Julie Beck, a non-traditional student, who went through the college's PACE program and earned a bachelor's degree in Elementary Education in 2009. Julie teaches at Greensferry Elementary in Post Falls. "I was so excited to find a program that worked for me. I have always worked with children and knew I wanted to be a teacher since I was in 1st grade. I initially went to LCSC right after I graduated from Mullan High, but got married and decided to stay at home with my own children before finishing my degree. The teachers and students I met through the PACE program have made me the teacher I am today."
